It\'s easy to take away

He asked me to dye his hair, since he was too lazy to go to downtown. At first I didn't quite buy it, but said yes. Why the fuck did I say yes?

He left hours ago. I'm still here, in my apartment, curled into the shower corner. I don't want to move. The cold water doesn't wash the feeling away. The feel of his hands on me, pressing me against the wall.

I want to forget. I want the pain to go away, body and mind. How can I face any of them now? Jani, why you did this?
